Parameter Programming

This operation is used to read and program parameter values.

The number prior to the parameter ID describes which level the parameter has.

The values of parameters at levels 2, 3 or 4 can be changed, with certain exceptions. The parameters that cannot be changed are shown in gray.

By marking a parameter and pressing the coupled-parameter button, a boolean expression is generated that states if the parameter is viable for users of VCADS Pro.

Note: Fault codes may be stored in some of the ECU's during programming. These fault codes should be cleared.

Note: The following applies only to markets with a legal requirement for speed limitation. The programmer is responsible for ensuring that all programming is carried out correctly and that the road speed limit complies with relevant legislation. Certification from the relevant authorities is required to carry out road speed limit (RSL) programming.

Note: The values column has two different types of values. One type where any value between the min max limits can be entered, these are aligned to the right in the column. The other type has fixed values to choose from, these are aligned to the left.

When you have the option to select a fixed value, the field displays the internal code for the different possible values (ENUM code) as well as the setting.

Format: [ENUM code]-Value
Examples:
0=Disable, 2=Enable 100mA, 10=Enable 500mA
3=20.5, 4=23.5, 5=26.5

The ENUM code is not to be confused with the value of a specific parameter setting.
